Proceeds benefit

There are approximately one million Americans alive today with heart defects. However, there is not one nationally recognized organization that has responded to the needs of these individuals and their families. Congenital Heart Defects (CHD's) are the number one birth defect in the United States, affecting approximately 40,000 newborns each year. Although medical advances have helped to increase the survival rate of those born with chd's, there is still not enough national funding for scientific research.
